Those were the good old days... Jantzen Beach Long Ago

By Melvin Van Domelen, Mountindale, OR

For those of you who have followed my past stories, you know I have a habit of revisiting memories of my youth. The Dairy Co-op picnic at Jantzen Beach is another of those memories.

After the Great Milk War of the early 1930's, many local dairymen formed their own Dairy Co-Op to process and market their milk. This dairy co-op held an annual picnic the second Sunday of August at Jantzen Beach for many years. So, its August now, come back with me and revisit Jantzen Beach again.

Jantzen Beach was a huge amusement park on Hayden Island. Located just before where the Interstate Bridge crosses into Washington. The parks size was about 40 acres. Probably more if one included the parking area and the auto race track.

My parents would receive free passes into the park with our milk check. I went to these picnics with my family ever since I can remember. The folks took their own picnic lunches. The dairy co-op had a refrigerated truck there and provided cold milk, chocolate milk, and ice cream. The ice cream was in those little Dixie cups. Half vanilla, half orange sherbet, along with the flat wooden spoons. Little Dixie cups, all you could hold.

There would be an entertainment program and games for the kids. All children were given free tickets for the rides and attractions.

Gala Opening

Jantzen Beach Event Saturday

Jantzen Beach park will start the 1941 season Saturday with new features, remodeled attractions and all the fanfare of a circus, according to Paul H. Tsuedepohl, manager of the park.

Featured will be two robot circus acts, "Joe Barker" and "Laffing Sal"—complete with the tones and accents of the best showbusiness gingers. Life-sized figures capable of realistic motions, they are calculated to out-talk anyone in any audience.

An exhibition of Chinese art, including fabrics, metal and wood, will be presented by Miss Kay Sheen, while the ballroom will feature the first of a series of famous dance bands—the first to be Hal Howard and his orchestra.

The Portland Traction company will operate special bus service to the park from the Kenton station, Mr. Tsuedepohl announced.

The entrance into Jantzen Beach Park was directly under the roller coaster, a huge wooden structure. This was a main attraction named the Big Dipper and was a thrill ride. You had to get your courage up to ride this one.

The best bargain on the midway was the Fun House, because you could go in and stay as long as you wanted. The Fun House had this laughing lady out front. She was a pump animated mannequin that shook, wiggled and laughed all day. Outside were the contorted mirrors that made you look skinny, or short and fat. And, there was a guy who shot the ladies skirts up with an air hose as they walked over an exposed catwalk. Inside were creepy dark passages with slanty floors and crawly things in there.

A large revolving barrel, something like a squirrel cage, was turned by people climbing inside of it. I fell down in that barrel once and liked to never get out of it. Everyone kept the thing spinning and it was like being in a washing machine on the spin dry cycle. Knees and elbows all skinned up, pants torn.

The old mill was a slower pace. A large wooden water wheel supplied the current to move small boats along a channel in an enclosed tunnel. Everything was dark until you came upon lighted scenes that were spread out along the way. This ride seemed to attract the romantically inclined.

The music would drift out of a fancy dance hall there called the Golden Canopied Ballroom. This ballroom attracted the big name bands and was home to dance competitions.

On one side of the park, next to the highway, was an Olympic size swimming pool. There were three pools really, but the big pool had the high diving boards and the striped lanes.

The centerpiece of the midway was this large carrousel. After the park closed in 1970, the merry-go-round was used in the Jantzen Beach shopping mall that replaced the amusement park that I knew. That shopping mall has, in turn been replaced. I read a few weeks ago that no one seems to know where the old carrousel is.

Because of the crowding in our car, my Uncle George and Aunt Ethel were taking me home one year. We saw a concession stand called the Fish Pond with hundreds of strings connected to prizes on the shelves. Some really grand prizes, but I suspect mostly small. Uncle George supplied the quarter. I pulled a string and this small ceramic camel was attached. I still have this camel today to remind me of Uncle George and Jantzen Beach.

When I was about five years old, I was left at Jantzen Beach once. There were two families there that year, two cars for transportation. Lots of kids.

When it was time to leave, everyone was milling around and deciding which car to ride in. I was watching the bumper cars, loved those bumper cars. And, they left me. The families stopped a short distance away to check on everyone, and no Melvin! Straight back to Jantzen Beach. When they reclaimed me, I was sitting on a counter in the office wearing a large police man's hat and eating an ice cream cone. My parents always laughed about this as years went by and told me of the time I was left at Jantzen Beach.

The Oaks Park near Sellwood is the only thing around today that can begin to compare with Jantzen Beach. The Oaks is on a much smaller scale, but I get a good feeling whenever we go there. It's like going back in time, the best of times.
